Lemon Grove couple gets bomb materials with used car purchase

They wanted to call it "La Bomba." Little did Lemon Grove residents Tricia Carlson and her husband know how apropos that nickname would become when they recently purchased a 1966 Pontiac Tempest convertible. Upon cleaning the trunk, Mrs. Carlson eyed some items which alarmed her—bits of strange rope, contacts, switches, and funny-looking tubes. She knew something was amiss and called the Sheriff's Department. As it turned out, curiosity could have killed the Carlsons, for she had an assortment of bomb parts left in the trunk by the military man from whom she had purchased the car.

Officers kept the curious at a safe distance as they awaited the experts from the Bomb-Arson Detail. Soon "Catfish" Williams had the material literally wrapped up in a ballistic blanket.

A happy ending for the Lemon Grove couple, but not so happy for the fellow who sold the car. He has some questions to answer.

Masons to honor one of its members

The Hiram Award, the highest award that can be bestowed upon a master mason, will be presented to LeRoy B. Maxwell at 7 p.m. on October 16. This award is presented to those who have served their country, community and lodge faithfully and untiringly.

Maxwell has been a resident of Lemon Grove for 35 years. He and his family live at the 280 block of Olive Street.

Maxwell was born on a farm in rural Texas, May 14, 1920, the second of six children, to John William and Inez Josephine Turpen Maxwell. There were four boys and two girls. He spent the early part of his life on the farm near Rendon, Texas, which is now a suburb of Fort Worth.

He enlisted in the U.S. Navy in 1941. He took his recruit training in San Diego, received aviation training at Alameda, California, and was assigned to a seaplane squadron.

The Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor, and shortly thereafter he was deployed to Hawaii. The squadron did anti-submarine patrol in the mid and south Pacific. He returned to the new B-24 training squadron at Naval Air Station North Island and Auxiliary Air Station Camp Kearny, which is now Miramar Naval Air Station. Between deployments, he was assigned training at Naval Air Station, Hutchinson, Kansas.

Maxwell received the degrees of masonry in Reno Lodge #140 in Hutchinson, Kansas. He received the Master Mason Degree on September 14, 1944. Soon thereafter, he was deployed overseas to the far end of the Aleutian Islands, at Shemya Island.

Commentary

by Max Goodwin

It's hard to break years-long habits.

Throughout much of my adult life has been my association with cops and firefighters in a journalistic way.

Having told you that, you will be able to understand my faux pas last week.

It happened when my grandson Jamie Godley, age 5, was sent home from Golden Avenue Kindergarten because he had a fever.

His widowed mother, Lisa Godley, was at work, and I was elected to take the lad to the doctor. I called Lemon Grove's Dr. George Brassington to make the appointment by phone.

The nurse asked the normal questions: age, weight, address, parentage and nature of the ailment.

I passed those tests easily. Then the cops-firefighters connection came to life. When she asked, "What phone number do we call when there's an emergency?" I answered without thinking, "9-1-1."

Perhaps a box of candy will bring me back into her good graces.

A day later the boy had responded to treatment and was full of mischief as only a healthy five-year-old can be.

I join the millions of Americans who suffered from the screwed-up coup d'etat in Panama, October 3 against General Manuel Noriega, the Panamanian dictator and alleged drug lord.

The foul-up begs the question: Why does the United States government try to prove itself incapable of showing a picture of strength when challenged?

The Korean misadventure, the Bay of Pigs humiliation and the Nicaraguan indecision are only some of the examples.

Properly, the United States should not commit itself to putting out every fire that evolves worldwide, but there are those to which we seem to commit ourselves without enough preparedness to meet that commitment.

We should be deeply disturbed by the apparent weakness of our President and his subordinates.

Nationwide television and press indicated that Washington knew about the coup-to-be. Also indicated was that President Bush failed to call a meeting of his war cabinet and security council to assess the hazards of inaction.

There can be as much danger in inaction as there is in action because to excuse disturbances with but a slap on the wrist creates a boldness in an antagonist that could be extremely costly.

It appears that President Bush was overplaying his self-made model of "cool" leadership. We would like him to exhibit the same anger he did when the wrong-doings of Noriega were spotlighted by Mr. Bush for the media several weeks ago.

His anger seemed genuine when he condemned the lack of human rights in Panama and of the drug-pushing that is helping to make the U.S. the largest drug consumer in the world.

His prior anger and his present reaction to the Noriega caper leaves much to be desired. We would welcome his anger if he backs it up with a show of strength, but that has been lacking.

No. We should not invade Panama "cold-turkey." But when we were told that there was no plan for action and that not even the Security Council or the War Department were called in for discussions to assess the hazards involved, it made us fearful that adventurists, such as Noriega, would misread our inaction and create an act of war (short as it may be) by which thousands of innocents would die.

As it stands today, Panamanians may have lost much of their respect for America's promise of aid for those who suffer from the lack of human rights.

Clipping Coupons

Did you ever wonder what happens to all the manufacturers' coupons that the supermarket chains take in? Nearly all the markets give double for at least three of one kind. What a mountain that would make from their many stores? Some of the coupons are cellophane, some are cardboard, some are neatly trimmed; others ragged and torn, all sizes and shapes from newspaper, bag, or box all heaped in one pile. What a mess!

I just could not believe that someone somewhere had to go through that huge pile daily, sorting them out as which ones go where, and then to send them in to the proper manufacturer for credit.

By asking the local checkout person or store manager, I still couldn't get the complete story of this gargantuan part of today's supermarket operation. I had to know more so I telephone-interviewed Larry Mabee, the president of Big Bear Stores. He answered all my many questions with a very courteous and intelligent response.

First, the coupons are tabulated by computer as they are redeemed at the store register. After that, most of the bigger supermarket chains send their bags of coupons to a company that does all the sorting and refunding for them. Big Bear is one locally-owned chain that does all their own physical sorting at one central office and deals directly with the many manufacturers for their due refunds.

Their sorting office is located in Lemon Grove and employs four to six people to tend this tedious job. The coupons come into this sorting station in 10-pound bundles. A sorter can average 12 to 13 pounds of the little gems per day, ending up with 500 coupon packs. Not only does the supermarket chain receive the face value of the coupon, but also a small handling charge.

I do all the grocery shopping for our family, and I do clip coupons. By using the doubles, I can sure make a dent in the soaring tape total. The coupons I like best are the ones printed "No Expiration Date." I do believe the manufacturer or bottler program the expiration date to fall in between "sales" featuring their products. It's very rare that the coupons are still in effect during one of their big promotions.

Using those pesky coupons is just an added chore for the shopper and I'm sure the store and its employees feel the same way. Why doesn't the manufacturer just lower the selling price of their products and eliminate all the hassle of clipping coupons?

Of course, that would only speed up the checkout lines at the supermarkets, causing the sorting companies to seek another endeavor, put many employees on the unemployment rolls, and most disastrous of all: What would I do with all that spare time that I formerly used for clipping and sorting coupons?

Matadors shut out Norsemen

By Tim Boice

The Mount Miguel Matadors led by tailback/cornerback Corey White shut out the Valhalla Norseman 12-0 at Mount Miguel last week.

White scored from both sides of the ball on a 6 yard run and a 28 yard interception return to even the Matadors record at 2-2-1.

The home team's defense was highlighted by Jamal Cherry and Chris Martin each with three quarterback sacks, Keith Baldwin with two interceptions, and Victor Ware led the team in tackles.

Sophomore running back Earl Bryers sparked the offense with 151 yards on 19 carries and Chris Fanning's 45-yard catch set up the TD run by White.

The Mount Miguel Matadors play host to El Capitan tomorrow night at 7:30 p.m.

County ups park user fees

The San Diego County Board of Supervisors voted today to increase user fees, primarily for group and commercial use, at County parks for the first time since 1986. Rates will become effective November 3.

"The proposed fees reflect attention to market consideration, cost of operation and the County's need to partially offset park operating costs with park fees," Board Chairperson Susan Golding said. Fees for individual and family day use, without reservations, will remain the same, said Supervisor Golding.

Major changes include a new $20 parking fee for commercial busses, and an increase from $25 to $55 for the yearly fee for boaters on Lake Morena. Fees for reserved group picnic sites which formerly ranged from $50 to $125, will cost $75 to $250. The amplified music fee has been dropped.

Family overnight camping will increase from $5-12 to $6-16 and the family pet can continue to camp for $1 per night.

Group rates have also been increased. County residents who purchase discount cards will continue to receive reduced-fee camping. Senior and disabled residents also continue to receive substantial discounts on most park services.

For additional information, contact County Parks and Recreation, 694-3049.

Sports Commentary

By John E. Wirges

Rex Cole is one of those good-looking, out-doorish types who always seems at ease with the passing parade, be they presidents, corporate big-wigs, heads of states, members of the 400, society stiffs or humble members of the sporting media.

He's too nice a guy to aid, give comfort to, or consort with anyone who would create a monster. He's just not the type.

That makes his part in the "Case of Change at Carlton Oaks" all the more mysterious. Rex spent just under a full year as midwife to the enhancement, rectification and amendment of the Carlton Oaks Country Club.

Comfortable old Carlton Oaks, the friendly golfing layout that was for so long a favorite of north siders in the East County, has grown dreadful claws, complete with atrocious traps and deplorable undulations.

Oh, the fairways are full and thick in pile of a grass developed for tournament play. The greens are large and rolling and well-manicured in the richness of the same bent grass mix.

That has not always been the case at Carlton Oaks, a course well enough considered that it hosted the 1974 NCAA Golf Championships. The course tended to dry up in summers past.

But Hawaiian businessman, Allan Kunimoto, a doctor of ophthalmology, who can see opportunity when it comes into view, bought the place and hired dynamic golf course designer Perry Dye, son of the famed Pete Dye, to replant, reseed and redo. It fell to Cole, as the club's head pro, to keep the spirit of Carlton Oaks golf alive during the renovations.

They turned the course upside down and full around. Play is now west on the front side and into the hills in closing. Perry Dye learned his craft well working with his dad on such marvelous courses as Sawgrass, La Quinta and Oak Tree.

There is a trace of Machiavellianism somewhere in the Dye heirline. Mere mortal man could not dream up such awesome hazards and diabolically designed twists and turns and traps found so abundantly distributed over the acreage of this scenic beauty.

There are 5 sets of tees, ranging from 7,109 yards for the tournament player down to 4,815 yards for beginning women and summer soldiers. The distance mostly doesn't matter.

The course rolls to offer a side hill shot on every attempt and a pair of lakes and 35 new traps and bunkers spiced up the old challenges of the course, always considered "plenty tough."

The 600-plus yard, par 5, 13th hole is typical of the new difficulties. There are 11 bunkers bordering this hole, the largest running some 150 yards in a crescent shape guarding the approach to the green. It is said this bunker is haunted by the ghost of a Foreign Legionnaire, who gives comfort to those lost in its warm sands for longer than 3 days.

Carlton Oaks comes complete with an ambitious fee, $55 a round for play and half a cart. It drops to $30 at twilight time.

It's a high class course and don't be surprised to see the U.S. Amateur or the NCAA tee up there in the mighty near future. Host pro Rex Cole is just the guy to make 'em feel at home.
